RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

Topic: Perceived parenting style and vocational identity among adolescents

Post Graduate dissertation, Jun 2021 – May 2022

Department of Human Development, Mount Carmel College Autonomous, Karnataka, India

Supervisor: Dr. Sujata Gupta Kedar, Phd

- Designed study to understand the statistical relationship between parenting style and adolescents vocational identity development.
- Conducting interviews on 300 adolescents from Bengaluru. To understand the influence of parents and siblings, role of decisional stress, and, vocational choice.
- It was found in this study that all the demographic variables and parenting factors have varied relationship with an adolescent's vocational identity development. Authoritarian parenting style does prove to result in a more dysfunctional vocational identity, but by adopting democratic parenting style does not guarantee a healthy vocational identity development. As there are other variables that have proven to have an effect in shaping the parenting style and vocational identity of the adolescent. It can be said though that this research does prove parenting styles to have a positive or negative effect on the vocational identity development of the adolescent, depending on the type of parenting style exercised.
